CONTENTS

IVY ALVAREZ * KERRY BANAZEK * MEGAN BURNS *
ZARAH BUTCHER-MCGUNNIGLE * C.S. CARRIER *
LISA CICCARELLO * SHANNA COMPTON * MEL COYLE & JENN MARIE NUNES * NAVA FADER * REBECCA FARIVAR * LEORA FRIDMAN * SUSANNA FRY * A.T. GRANT * DAVID HADBAWNIK & CARRIE KASER * J/J HASTAIN * MICHAEL KALISH * FRIEDRICH KERKSIECK *
SETH LANDMAN * AUBRIE MARRIN * RACHEL MORITZ * SHEILA MURPHY * JENNIFER PILCH * MICHAEL ROBINS * JORDAN SOYKA * HUGH BEHM-STEINBERG * ROBERT SWEREDA * SEAN ULMAN * VINNY WALSH *
THEODORE WOROZBYT * KARENA YOUTZ & SCOTT ABELS

EDITED BY JEN TYNES & MICHAEL SIKKEMA COVER ART BY VINNY WALSH (& LIVE CICADA) from The Everyday English Dictionary

O

opuscule, opuscle:
this toil demands infinite attention small waltz on square tile one two three        one two three orbicular:

my forefinger traces here to fore touches the capitals shadows on blue water

organon, organum:
reject the dry sections and clauses here is the split orchis I examine under glass

orison:
something comes from the throat a note clings to the walls dances on a dust mote orography, orology:

should you dissect this one you will find at its core the column of volcano it used to be orpiment:

petty as a dandelion perilous as a skiff watch me place dumb petals        on a tongue of wind ort:
no-one had to tell me
to leave food to feed the gods

orthoepy:
ah bah kah dah eh gah ha ee lah mah nah oh pah rah sah tah oo wah yah orthography:

a love of ink or chalk linked to three bars on a blackboard a roomful of hands follow the leader ubiety:
this is the place with its particular atmosphere of dust and light or lack of of love or lack of insects bumping against the glass while I watch them try uliginous:

first they tied her hands together with rubber bands her fingers turned purple turned blue then came the okra its slick seeds and strange juice she shut her mouth to keep out the spoon ulilage:

here is the measure of need a matter of centimetres only a drop becomes a drip becomes a flood over the oaken lip ultramontane:

see ubiety

ultroneous:
let me unspool my history before you say another word to stop me vilipend:
you drive pigs mad crows turn white snakes bite themselves to death vill:

wide streets point to high hopes nobody visits but the wind a curtain-twitcher waits behind each window sips a cup of tea villi:

peach rub almond fur soft nap under pad of thumb villous, villose:

little button beds of moss caught on a damp mountain filtered light rests on small raised seed-heads vinaceous:

ilipstick stain on your cheek from my lips

vinculum:
with this ring a merry-go-round

vinose:
ignorance about apple seeds in the apple pie might be a good excuse

Ivy Alvarez is the author of Mortal (Washington, DC: Red Morning Press, 2006), with a second collection forthcoming from Seren Books (UK). A recipient of writing residencies from MacDowell Colony (USA), Hawthornden Castle (UK) and Fundacion Valparaiso (Spain), her work is published in journals and anthologies in many countries and online, with individual poems translated into Russian, Spanish, Japanese and Korean. www.ivyalvarez.com from Torrents and Groundviews

WE KNOW TO ASK:

Wax-ripping and wind storms and. Where to go for a defense of root laying?

WE ASK TO HEAR:

WHAT HEARING IS.

Wayside late. Sleeping in the driver's seat, the you-can't-stay-heres tapping at the window. Gargantuan-like. A finite area surrounded by a line of infinite length.

The swarming green of temperate conifer forests or volcano skirts. Punched-in dunes that hiss and change their maws at will. That empty and empty out and employ, that expose and. Call exposure like it is seen from space or air or. Sky scrapers, which used to be tallest ships. Semiarid steppe and outright billowings of busted. Down and mythic and. Calling a living as-you-see it: desert and crackling like scorpion boot.
ASLEEP.

In the sand or on a smooth stone or sprawlingly as if. Worlds and world-namings could wait, though the we-knows prove all’s flash-floods and otherly. Stacking cairns or pulling to rock-arrange or leaping from once to once to granite and cutting out. Old growth on the road. Calling a gully.
And a mesa and the hailstones in the afternoon like commemorative watch-clocks.

OR MACROINVERTEBRATES.

Caught and. Catching tricks. In vegetated fins.
Irrigation and inspection and edible bodies that push each other inside out and outside as-if and turn each other into mouths.
Like tongue-things turn each other and. Turn to other oceans.
Or turn to each other. Asking name shapes or. Other smallest inspirations.

Other smallest detestations.

A LEXICON OF PASS-THROUGH PLACES.

A thicket of. Vacui—that one the only. Oak tree we ever saw in a mountain yard. Memory-felted, the loss, lightning or. In the tuning brightness, rough-laced, cigarettes. Solder-hot metal. Chestnuts and acorns and the mouths of other people. Not a smile just a look. An illicit way of walking with. Spines that fold. A ringed moon. Dozen-season year. A petty theft that only opens once.

Kerry Banazek is a writer, teacher, and sometime photographer with ties to Northern New York, Western Pennsylvania, and the Pacific Northwest. Her poetry and microprose has recently appeared on Web Conjunctions, in the Seneca Review, and elsewhere.
Anatomy of the Poet adapted from Robert Duncan’s Letter to Denise Levertov, #405

Megan Burns is currently writing about narcissism as it occurs in the performances of Nicki Minaj and Unica Zürn. solidquarter.blogspot.com
A baby is left out in the open, for instance on a suburban park bench. Which is the same as the man writing an essay next to a closet of empty clothes or a closet empty of clothes. Nothing rises or conflicts, there’s simply a set of questions set to music. They will always show what they are required. Though with a different setting it would be unrecognizable. A beautiful, hurt mouth. Close to midnight. At the same time, one cannot feel another person’s pain, but only infer it from their behaviour and their reports of it. The background was in the backyard but I’ve always struggled with beginnings. The man I was talking to was small and faraway. Coincidence is stitched into goals. A few frames later, wheels fall off to create drama. A rendering of things which open with discrepancy and close with similarity. What’s wrong with this picture.
(Yesterday those habits were thoughts)

Even though I notice the past tense, and can see myself framed and dated on the wall, I am standing on a street I know but do not recognize. Not then or then, only the captive now. Filled with whatever it is by itself, drawings of feet without bodies, cardboard, burnt hair, the lengthening and shortening of hems. Gathering momentum and abrasions as if falling downstairs. Suppression of this results in a thin upper lip. If yesterday those habits were thoughts. The woman who is not her raining harder now. I am only a tendency. Without the frame it would collapse into itself, but does it help to call her a symptom. A chapter of a book was written. It takes no longer than a minute. The audience switches places with her, and switches back, and switches back. I was waiting as I am waiting now.
(True or left)

The remains when everyone has finished eating. If you think about it later on, you’re already involved. Her voice is the horse must graze where it is tethered. Yet, already, bones. True or left. I have a hard time saying no. The sign lead each person to a different place. Straight from the fridge she eats, “because I was poor as a child, I will never get anywhere.” How many years from the table-clot to the door.
(A wheel together with an axle)

Today, which is not related to luck. I am not run over by a bus. Any more than three was “many.” Many people, many leaves, many leaving. Seeing them there, the participle to indicate the ongoing, but I don’t know any interior details. Yet, while walking, she collided with a graph. Connections, but lack of cycles. Or so it was in that condition. She awaited her father’s approval. There, but it’s not enough to say it is just because it has been for some time. If you were a tree, which kind, I ask the people lined up for the bus. A wheel, together with an axle, overcomes fiction.

Zarah Butcher-McGunnigle currently lives in Wellington, New Zealand, where she is completing an MA in Creative Writing at Victoria University. Her work has appeared in publications such as Landfall, Poetry NZ, Best NZ Poems 2011, Otoliths, Colorado Review, and St. Petersburg Review.
With Deer

bulbous clouds outlined in charcoal receding towards the mountains gold fishhooks dangling from them ashy figures from the fishhooks dotted textboxes from the figures some figures face up & some down some smile & some wince road splitting the field on one side the Hartford skyline buildings lit by yellow arrows striking the edifice at downward angles white deer with spindly legs jutting through a window on the other side of the road me crouching in a turquoise swatch holding a tick by the legs eating its abdomen With Chimera

the field brown with wheat turquoise lake in the distance behind the lake mountains of carets behind the mountains palimpsest of cursive some of the stars lightbulbs some asterisks some pentagrams a gold lowercase i stamped repeatedly on a violet curtain beside me my head tilting back eyes closed a hole in my cheek exposing my teeth my chest green & chipping my cock a bundle of flagella one arm humanoid one cybernetic one an m16 one a twig one leg a marblecolumn one a pulleysystem one goat one human With Beard

orange dots & turquoise dots & black dots radiating from a single perspective columns of blood cascading with rows of m c m l x x i i i black sentence diagrams layered with synapses beside red bricks beside osteoblasts and osteoclasts contours of yellow yarn under jagged blue lakes white goats galloping

a giant white goat with five spindly legs my head affixed to its neck horns growing from my head long white beard growing from my chin With Bed

a steel bed bridging a ravine the ravinewalls red fire licking the bottom of the bed crows perching on the headboard some as robots some with letters on their wings some their beaks gaping little crows for tongues gray impasto moon outlined in charcoal gray impasto satellites outlined in charcoal the indigo sky activated with fingerprints the distance columns of stacked letters at the foot of the bed a snarling cyan wolf with the word wolf above it lying in the fetalposition slight smirk on my face arms inviting the wolf to me With Submerged

in the kitchen frenchpress in one hand mug in the other to my right TIE & Zero fighters below them smokeplumes from the water 21 20’ 38” N 157 58’ 30” W in black on the water below the water a pair of skyscrapers made of air & charcoal smokeplumes from the edifices into the water shirtless my expression flat to my left the floor into a small hole at the bottom a fire burning red arrows pointing from it to the skyscrapers to the water to the fighters to the frenchpress to my mouth & back to the fire

C. S. Carrier's collection, Mantle, is forthcoming from H_NGM_N BKS in 2012. He's also author of After Dayton, published by Four Way Books in 2008. His chapbooks include Postcard Feat (Hinchas de Poesia 2010) & Lyric (horse less press 2008). His poems have appeared in numerous journals, including Indefinite Space & Little Red Leaves. He lives in Clarksville, AR & Lafayette, LA, where he's pursuing a PhD in English at the University of Louisiana Lafayette.
From Fox Stories

Music:

In the black woods is the foreign voice of the fox. The atonal song; bark of their mouths & of their dying & their footsteps too.

In the woods is the language of woods. Words are cast from the teeth of foxes that shine in the light; fox teeth among the lichen at the cleft steps of the deer.

Tall the trees & tall the legs among the slip-speaking deer, fallow & roe, on the steps of the trunk at the stair of the burrow where the fox quails & bleeds.

Oak ash birch: fox hollow, deadwood to the home of it.
Wind:

The exaggerated story of the quiet step. The vigilant watch. Fox in fox, this is how the story is made.

Each carries a drum in their open mouth: here & there, the uncertain walk. Repeating the hollow sound of blood: noise of rain on wood or wood on stone.

The shaking of leathers & leaves. The exaggerated hush.

The wind gives them a sound to step in. Paw & sleeve, the curved blade hidden beneath. The closed gate.
Water:

A place that does not need a lake has one. The foxes find it impossible to enter: a rain of waves rises from the small center.

The surface of the water is entirely teeth. The wind makes it speak. A string of crabs is driven from the fur of the throat by the sound.

Asleep, the lake is common eye & den mouth, is stone-pin & soft neck upturned.

In the teeth of the fox the crabs shatter like eggs. Their tongues are coated with yolk. The mud of the lake is yolk, too the word it says.

Lisa Ciccarello is the author of three chapbooks: At night (Scantily Clad Press, 2009), At night, the dead (Blood Pudding Press, 2009) & the upcoming Sometimes there are travails (Hyacinth Girl Press, 2012). Her poems have appeared or are forthcoming in Handsome, Tin House, Denver Quarterly, Leveler, Lungfull! & Corduroy Mtn., among others.
Vices should come with brand names

And this morning comes with a popping of forsythia. Finally! I'm hanging the laundry outside on the back porch from a piece of rope I've strung between some hooks and nails and hoping my neighbor, who without fail asks to borrow something/anything I'll never get back, won't hear me.
Out by the back fence I notice a single daffodil that's never been there before, not in our four years, so I say Hi, Georgia! to it as I tug straight the seams on my favorite pair of jeans. I should say that I couldn't understand any of the Walt Whitman recording but it delighted me anyway and that I used to live in his Brooklyn neighborhood, or one of them, where he worked for the Eagle newspaper.
Friends, we agree. We do, we do, we do more work and like the fair-eyed tomboys we were in youth still dodge bursts from our colicky temperaments so that a lot of time interactions feel pretty tentative, experimental. Otherwise I think we might be bored instead of kind of in love with everything, like April and laundry and that peerless daffodil I named for you, for no good reason, for every reason.
Timetables & Humble Pie

Alas the day is wasted. Toss the scrapped commodity in a pile like snipped stockings, admired in the morning but soured by noon.

I look back at that laughable pink-tinged preamble, the way the muscular train rolled forlornly away into an unwearying Victorian English paragraph and lament that I, of all creatures, am not a bivalve.

What do I need with cuspids, or limbs to walk and fondle, a talent for speech, as one typifying solace-less-ness, a wimpy biter and squanderer of those trillion misplaced swans in the reservoir by the highway, each curving its legendary throat to query what dared I do, and at such tizzy speed, hurting as I was, flanked by peeling fields, oblivious of the terminal stop long past?

Shanna Compton’s books include For Girls & Others, Down Spooky, Gamers, and several chapbooks. A two-volume project is forthcoming: a collection called Brink in fall 2012, and a book-length speculative poem called The Seam in spring 2013. Recent work also appears in Open Letters Monthly, Barrelhouse, bus posters in Atlanta sponsored by the Emory University Poetry Council, and Poetry Daily.
die Astronaut die Greenwich die Moon die ihre Kunts. um spüle. den Wind. und Wind sich booty. engagenstamen. von fair Moonkunts. moribund seafarers labor und grub. das wheat Moon. so long wargraces war es so light. zwolf. schniff! das beast aber Athena. mit der wunderbare in zu speech. und barometer welt. die man den Astronauts. war es notable.
after it's gifted

it's finished

I'm mirror
befisting la mute

her sank in totem

da fruit kindle & da elf das same Landslut. bloody hermaphrodite begotten nicht. bewohnt words. or flog das hiney. harrass ’em says und Soviet. alarm. earthshaken. aber blood sport tuckus. er eunuch starve und muff. trainen senior mutton her guild. telegenome? system still warring.

“undernamed!” / “duckfucken?”

dank guessing hat. hail dark Symplegarden. Und sin error.
56.

die Harpyim.

riesling breath.

immigrant Harpyim. citizen hunter mit ditchdrugen.

scry dem Orakel mit matches.

den Harpyim flight. plot auf Botox. Zeus liplich swore.

die Harpyim dem robot.

curtains! nach so violent.

neu nutz mit wifegiften damage. wenn bestial

entrance.
Himmel finden aureus. und mirage von green locked. goldene fell auf. war in Fleece locked. I am not a hunter! a relief. und worde von Himmel? not too fawn. veil trick. see? Himmel es matched. orate pinko! befall und glib for glory. lies u name der King von joke. en treason hatt. a son war und perilous no Father.
So throne her Ist Hera of the one word Soldier of drunken stars Unkissen evening
Engine the such often
It is war der Der allies under veil Night-black hart
A bosom ist Hera Stranded in dresser
Under veilmatter Uneasy ducklings
Of mannermodern blink me stymied is it palace ist sound fleece

menses ist balmy yolk: semen

sich und-dressing

ist furr webkam striken Hera yolked to the kostbar 17.

GO 2 THE HIMMELGLOBUS

THE NIGHT KENNEL OF DAS TONGUE

MANY AMOROUS
MANY KITSCHEN

SHINE ON LA BRA
THE BLICK BLICK
MACH MAMMALIAN

BRING THE NIGHT WINE
THE FACKEL THE HILLFLOSS

TO THE TART OFF

THERE IS OPERA
IN ATHENS 2NITE
so wino starblicked.

leukemia.
leukemia.

saw Odysseus
in half.

a beewohman
black & quell

dloosy und disease.

Aunt Gala
will klip u back to handlebar

for the open munches.

Mel Coyle is from Chicago and other places where the corn grows. Her poetry appears in elimae, H_NGM_N, smoking glue gun, OH NO and kill author.

Jenn Marie Nunes is a poet and writer living in New Orleans. Her work is forthcoming or has appeared in such journals as Ninth Letter, Bateau, kill author, Drupe Fruits and spork. Her echapbook, STRIP, is available online through PANK Magazine, July 2011. Some say she has pretty eyes.

Mel Coyle & Jenn Marie Nunes are the founding editors of TENDE RLOIN, an online gallery for poetry: www.tender-loin.com among moons the fear of snails (Basinski) godgape yawp lithest murmurings back bend time’s curvature they make it to Triton cordoned sordid neckties nick of gouges a relentless rennetless near april fool’s moon kept your distance absolute zero and the skin is weepy forgetting bedsheet whetted and wiped clean swathed your cunning beam molecular vicissitudes frills leg caught in her woolliest in the half-light of the wood seemed a vision slim nymph tuberculin a hot brief season laid in wait as only snails may Canto 23

Mute, dried apricot, dear companion.
Come, take a dip. We'll smoke some dope and I'll see myself through your eyes.

Sweet siphon your favorite.
You might have visions of doves in the parlor and sheep in the kitchen heralding a paralysis. Islanders know each other by the way they hold the fava bean to their lips on principle.

A meal of the mind and the scope of all waters, poison ones too, the smallest, and ugliest.

The cassava is a lost art.

Soufflés of flight
or you can’t get your teeth into them.
There is no testimony reaching this far in, paved over maledictions and membranes.

Steady diet of imagined assents, push teacups away of sentiment and of gladness.

reluctant wave of (Basinski) seizure coat cover her churners runny insiders linters linoleum backstabbers bayonets shy in their approaches doe-eyed needle-nosed pliers with tremble tonal silvers softer infusion gutsy gone misty eye bleed them just the same soft kittens sand down gritty butter on forgotten toast points cider-side her jugs are magical want of nothing tidal trimmed to nosegay after the semen has dried petal pellets a sullen itch behind the ears cradle cap cocoon the moon of hands beyond

Nava Fader is the author of All the Jawing Jackdaw (BlazeVOX), where each poem begins with a line by somebody else, as well as several chapbooks. Current projects are stealing from Michael Basinski’s book Trailers and making false translations from Dante’s Inferno.
Prishtina

I.

Eat your rib. Like it.
Throw up downstairs

and realize they all heard you gossip.

II.

There’s no water tonight.
We need to be woken.

The call to prayer—
you haven’t heard it.

The Ottoman mosque is lost to us.

III.

Men line the streets holding dollars like hefty fish.

Uncle, it is done, but in fact it’s never done—look—

we had a beautiful meal.
El Ojo de Aqua

They took my cookie sheets to the food truck and filled them with 60 tacos. Pastor, pollo, pescado. This is what sad people do. How long have they been here? Is it Thursday? What’s Thursday? Will it fit on this shelf? Did it fall between the stairs? At the end—no, close to the end—she would grab her hair and hand over the strands as if that’s what she’d forgotten, that’s what she’d meant to give you all along. The night we visited, late, too late. A woman needlessly sorting silverware. The TV so loud we couldn’t talk. Please turn it down! We can’t talk. All this chatter. That horrible brother. I’m a mean person at heart. This must be what the others sense and why they stay for days.

Rebecca Farivar is the author of Correct Animal (Octopus Books, 2011) and chapbook American Lit (Dancing Girl Press, 2011). She holds an MFA in poetry from St. Mary’s College of California and hosts the podcast Break The Line. Her poems have appeared or are forthcoming in Denver Quarterly, 6x6, cold-drill, RealPoetik, The Volta, Word For / Word, The American Poetry Journal, and elsewhere.
On the architecture

moreover the leaf went unwelcome at home

where hair was was more than a collar, a comb these two stops

where my work retires its own

green architecture, forgot my yardage,

brought tired for the dance, figured

any going to trees would need a room which missed a subway in half dark, brushed back so rural went to my eco-home,

I sleep flipping soundly a plant fed on sight

a couple more men who perspire so lightly I have come to believe a greenhouse On the architecture

everyone sells me what they felt, I'm no riches, I'm no alienlook, I have got these wires to prove my colors on the line the way they tell one visitor to wealth is booming is with its straight bright proof
On the architecture

I know more people want a part of this state every lunch a ringer, not a mistake, or my earrings went for value, my toe came straight ahead each time I lean in the body gets buds,

this is no time for plying: why would a woman

tour when she has these or I have come to believe
On the architecture

every kid goes this was my way

all sides ready actual break

my pillow went tallied like a neck scored on the offchance more women would win sweet cherry spoon it cake she made

this was my sagging this was her ten

rent the wipe now jangle my proof supervise my element single broke sass

we wondered for the can’s sake

killing the coat check taking more lives

top wound cloth went

this is more living a supervised wall
On the architecture

in the rising fountain a valid complaint
we were driving

left and drowning in the music all told four people could kill it could wipe it from maps I’m living are current in the future when no one drives

I will swim for division I can swim for more lengths more times I have wanted the trip to be now can you see us standing more weight in our knees sprat went for coffee we had to be fed water for all engines active duty on the shore gets angry with triumph for holding a head

I have not come to be wicked I could live on that spread

Leora Fridman is a writer, translator and educator living in Massachusetts. Her recent and forthcoming publications are included in Denver Quarterly, The Offending Adam, Housefire, Interrupture, and others. She is an MFA candidate at the UMass Amherst Program for Poets and Writers where she is Assistant Director of the Juniper Institute and co-curates the Jubilat/Jones Reading Series.
Nascent Entrance, Cedarn Censed

Sacred cedars created Cranes carted & crated tears

Canteen entrance traced cedars Serenade

Nascent trance

Cranes trace scar React

Dearest teared & tanned, Eastern snared,

Dear sender, tread eastern

Read stars
Dam tears
Rent secrets

Rats dart & dance

Earnest star trades eastern Ears neared Nearest crescent

Erase tender trance

Deer eaters
Nested tears

Star teas ease tears Erase ears

Ants recede

Sand rats erase scent Sentenced ants crested & steered

Centered

Star Tsar erected Sentenced desert
Scat seeders

Crescent nested
Cancer
Susanna Fry quiets her mind by imagining it as a vast desert. While attending to her newborn baby she teaches writing and runs the Writing Center at the University of Pennsylvania.
I Carry the Stain of Every Blow

The tape stuck in my VCR:

a home movie of the time when I was a little boy and a little

I was a little girl gave me a smack on the lips.

My lip split open and I knew where I was. From then on I located myself in that frame.

I adjusted the tracking when she grew up/grew out/got married in the parking/lot/ of people watching.

I was sad when she got left/murdered/away with it.

Her hands pressed into the concrete along with the rest of her.

After I touched her imprint my face

disappeared for months.

We called the sheriff.

My face plastered all over my house. My face full of cracks. My fault:

I taped over the childhood memories. Flooded with highkey light. To fix the tape

I set the cassette on the TVs stacked in the yard. And I shot it clear into the air. It flew like a flock of starlets. Pretending to die over and over into the celluloid. When she really died she signed her name over to me. Her name was my name spelled backwards.

When my VCR exploded

the star fragments stuck in the walls. I wanted to free them. I stuck a butter knife in the light socket.

It felt like the first time she kissed me off-camera.

I Carry the Stain of Every Blow

A hot white light burns through the screen and on the other side I see. My comeback. I crawl through the ropes.

Drop my hands and let the blows fall into me. The light projects into me. The hollow collapses. Into it self. Into me. But I can’t sleep unless the projector bursts my chest open and all that light works itself into the air. Then dissipates into the darkness of the corners.

Stay on the path. On the mat.
I have my own eye to cut out and cast into the cheap seats. Birds scatter and drop dead.
You can’t glare into me that way. Wait don’t take my wires away from me. Pinched shut and they don’t speak anymore. They only act as a channel. They flip and static. The air stagger through. Sprays a blur into my face. Presses my face into the screen. Dark ink drips from my eyes. Deep in the night I dream so many faces. So many blows I can’t contain them all myself.

\textbf{A.T. Grant} lives in Minneapolis. He has a band called New South Bear. You can hear them here: http://newsouthbear.bandcamp.com. He wants to play music or read poems in your house (or garage or boxing ring). His writing has recently appeared or is forthcoming in \textit{Country Music}, \textit{Sixth Finch}, \textit{inter\textbackslash rupture}, and \textit{La Petite Zine}.
[Leaving the mayhem of fallen Troy, Aeneas is stopped from taking out his anger on Helen by his mother, Venus, who urges him to get his family out and offers protection.]

4. dicum inclementia, dicum “Helen’s not the head that did all this.
Nor Paris. It’s the gods, the gods, the gods that tore Troy up from the roots

Look—and meanwhile I’ll snatch you all away in a cloud for your own good; listen to your mother and do what she says—you see buildings crumpled up in sad little balls, bodies lying in blood beneath ruptured stones, smoke pouring out everywhere? The work of Neptune shaking the foundations and stoking the whole thing with his trident as he rips it down.
There’s Juno cackling like a hag as she holds the Scaean Gate waving faggots in from the ships, urging them to bring swords.
And see, way up there? That bitch Athena crouches like a gargoyle gleaming in mist on the highest arches. And Jupiter himself smashes shit for the good of the Greeks, lifting them up by blowing fire into their bellies—think you stand any chance against that?”

RUN
she said “save your own ass and your family while I hover nearby watching out.” Then she slipped off folding herself in thick shadows. I saw them, then, the bastards, laughing at us as they brought down pain on Troy.
Divine mother-fucking cocksuckers fighting for Greece.
Then Troy fell for real—just like when a couple of lumberjacks chop down an ash tree, viciously stroking with double-axes making it sway from the death-blows till little by little it groans and collapses, carrying part of the ridge with it—I came down led by Venus through flames and swords that gave way before me. And when I’d reached my father’s house, I wanted to carry him off to the hills—but the stubborn old coot refused exile would rather go down with Troy.

“O you” he said “for whom blood and strength still flow—
RUN
if the gods wanted me to live they’d have let me do it here.
I’ve seen it all before—survived one fall of Troy—so treat me as already dead and RUN
I’ll kill myself, or an enemy will have mercy on an old man, off his sword. Easy to throw away proper burial. I’ve cheated death once—remember the time Jupiter hurled a lightning bolt at me?”

He went on like this and stood fixed in place while we, my wife Creusa and son Ascanius and the whole house, tearfully urged him not to further burden our fate.

He wouldn’t budge.
This made me so angry I burned to grab a sword and seek death—for what else was there?

“Do you think for one minute, Dad, I could lift a foot and abandon you here?
How could you even say such a thing?
If it pleases the gods to leave nothing of Troy, and if you want to add your corpse to those all around us, just open that door and Pyrrhus will pop out fresh from the copious blood of Priam, having slaughtered father and son and then played and fucked around in their death-gore. Was it for this, Mama, you snatched me from the fire, that I dicker and bitch with father while the enemy comes to cut us down where we stand?

Arms, men! Bring arms.
Last light calls to the conquered.
Give me to the Greeks—let me refight lost battles. No way we die today unavenged.”

But look—my wife wrapped herself round my feet in the doorway, raising tiny Ascanius up to me, crying—“If you’re about to die, take us with you.
But if you must take up arms, why not guard this house? Or do you want to leave us to whomever might come the moment you step out?”
And she screamed so loud she filled the whole house with it.
Just then, incredibly, an omen: FIRE
pouring out from the top of Ascanius’s cap, a flickering flame that licked around his brow not hurting him at all.

This made father smile.
He asked for a further sign, and almost instantly a shooting star blazed over the rooftop to fall in the woods around Mt. Ida.
Now father’s grin grew wider and, praising Jupiter, he agreed at last to go with me.
Carrying his father on his back, leading his wife and son out of the city, Aeneas suddenly realizes Creusa is missing, and runs back into burning Troy to look for her.

5. Infelix simulacrum

My wife appeared then familiar and strange all at once spooking the shit out of me and she said:

“Sweet husband, why wait around grieving stupidly?

The gods made all this happen

Jupiter himself snatched me away in the bargain—as for you, you’ll endure exile plow the waves long and deep with your ships till you reach Italy where rich fields feed strong men and the Tiber flows through.

There you’ll find joy in a new realm and royal wife so quit crying over Creusa, however much you loved me. At least I won’t live to be a Trojan whore to Greek slaves, I got to die daughter-in-law to a goddess on home soil.

RUN

and take care of our own little boy.”

There was a lot I wanted to say.

I tried to hold her but she slipped right through into the dreamworld and I snuck back to see what kind of ragtag bunch I had back at camp.

Lo and behold a huge crowd had come war-fucked youth already living in exile ready to follow me anywhere. And now the morning star rose over mountain ridge dragging day behind it.

With Greeks closing in and no help to speak of from broken Troy,

I raised my father up on my back and led us all out of there for good.

—end Book 2—
David Hadbawnik is a poet and performer currently living with his wife in Buffalo, NY. In 2011, he edited Jack Spicer’s Beowulf for the CUNY Lost and Found Document series (with Sean Reynolds), and published Field Work (BlazeVOX Books). Other publications include the books Translations From Creeley (Sardines, 2008), Ovid in Exile (Interbirth, 2007), and SF Spleen (Skanky Possum, 2006). He is the editor and publisher of Habenicht Press and the journal kadar koli. He began studying towards his PhD in poetics at SUNY Buffalo in fall 2008, where he directs the Buffalo Poets Theater.

Carrie Kaser teaches printmaking at the University of New Mexico in Albuquerque. She is a Tamarind-trained lithographer and has studied at the Rhode Island School of Design, University of New Mexico, University at Buffalo, where she completed an MFA in Visual Studies in 2011. Her work explores the construction of narrative and the interpretation of symbols through memory and past experience. Her prints and drawings have been featured in exhibitions nationally and internationally. from Between Diaspora and Diapason

Dear ::: ,

I realized that my consciousness is in my ulterior organs. Lungs afloat in the ether are attached to ulterior hearts. I must breathe this way so that I can breathe from outside of my body toward you. In order to breathe inexhaustibly.

I peppered the laryngeal prominences before slowly devouring them. Did this to tilt the garden. A fleshy flash of linen being buried and unburied in soil. Hints at apples floating in a pastel blur.
Dear I feel you closer now,

You is always a connotation. Natal and rest found in a penetralium. To intone varying atonalities as we find ways to touch intuited atonements. Escutcheon made of sapped together mirror fragments. I wanted to be an agent so manifold that I could eat, exist off of and live off of you within me enables I as genus.
You are reminding me more and more of Sir Lionel,

Or maybe I am seeing you in him. Choral wreckage filling a chasm with schisms of a blessed vessel. Beloved abecedarian. Forthcoming names are always concurrent. I obsess this way because you are what completes me. Yes, my wholeness is contingent. I sense you as staircases dislodging and awaiting commissure. I feel you in me as a feather with an exocarp.

Sir Lionel or,

Is musculature without volition a pressure instead of a motion? I ask because this is sometimes how I detect you.

Was it me trying to touch you while solitary in the tall grasses on my knees that first made melody in you? And is it me in my comrade impetuses that makes chromatics in you? To depict me accurately make me a non-sexed body, flying, with a deep and dangling etch attached at my throat. There are so many severe devotions and they are for clarifying how we are to ethically feast on each other by image.
Dear dear,

Flame is the alchemy of transitions. Flame is the impetus whereby skins are altered. Genders are and are not related to skins. It is the baobab tree in duration that makes the bowl shaped arc in its middle. A place to store water. A place to store these letters. A place where accumulation can mean reprieve.

I want to be a habitation capable of housing many figures at once.

The baobab tree is legend to have fallen from the sky and that is why its roots are above it. The fruit it bears hangs from root-like branches overhead. Embodied excess.
Dear dear,

I am trying to tell you not only that I will wait for you, but how I will wait for you.
Dear Sir Lionel,

Is it possible for me to have paramour feelings for any strictly human figure? Learning to mate with fragmentary avatars. Fragments perform themselves on me. As we. There are times when changes in the mirror save.

A she becomes a he becomes a she.

Being buried re-occurringly to upkeep obscure shrines. A place that when it is added to, is so dense that it will never dry.

j/j hastain lives in Colorado, USA with xir beloved. j/j is the author of numerous cross-genre works previously published and forthcoming (a few of which are): prurient anarchic omnibus (Spuyten Duyvil), long past the presence of common (Say it with Stones), a womb-shaped wormhole (BlazeVox), treOOA (with Eileen Tabios/ Marsh Hawk Press), guttural silk make new gong (Unlikely Books). j/j’s writing has appeared in numerous journals including Trickhouse, Vlak, Big Bridge, The Offending Adam, Dear Sir, Eccolinguistics, Housfire, EOAGH, Aufgabe, Queerocracy Art, Masculine Femininities, Caketrain, Plath Profiles, Bombay Gin. j/j is currently in the process of curating an Anthology of Queer Nudes (Knives Spoons and Forks Press, 2013) and has helped curate (and participated in) two major Trans anthologies. j/j is an Elective Affinities participant, a member of Dusie kollektiv, writes for Lit Pub and is a regular contributor to Sous Les Paves. j/j currently writes creative reviews for Big Other, Jacket2, Horse Less Press, PANK and Emprixe Review. j/j’s work appeared in a Queer-focused show at the Leslie-Lohman Annex in New York. j/j’s books have been finalists in the Kelsey Street, Grey Book Press, Grace Notes Books, Switchback, Omnidawn, DIAGRAM and Ahsahta book and essay competitions. j/j’s work has been nominated for the Pushcart Prize and Publishers Triangle. j/j’s manuscript extant shamanisms won the Pavement Saw poetry award. j/j’s manuscript dear secondary umbilical, won second place in the Mad Hatter’s Wild and Wyrd Poetry Contest. In 2011 j/j’s book see in my Trans was nominated for the Stonewall Book Award and j/j’s book prurient anarchic omnibus was nominated for a Lambda Literary Award.
Untitled (Icon, Phaedrus) 11" x 5" x 5", 2012. Copper tubing, cicada husk, ginkgo leaves. Fold-formed, electroformed, sifted vitreous enamel, torch- and kiln-fired Michael Kalish studied sculpture at Brown University and the Rhode Island School of Design in the mid 80s, winning ‘best of show’ at his senior student exhibit at Brown. Armed with this honor and his degree in Cognitive Science, he embarked on an academic career with too little attention to art. He moved to Australia in 1995, where he hand-built an adobe fireplace in his rammed-earth block house on a hectare of bush outside Perth. He moved to Lafayette in 2002, and began making forged metal jewelry soon thereafter. When not working in the studio or the laboratory he is investigating the intersection of art, craft, and science through Craft Theory and (cognitive) aesthetics. More work can be seen on his blog, foldandspindle.blogspot.com CALL IT WHAT IT IS & I WILL CALL IT SOMETHING ELSE

The bears are not sleeping while they eat you.
The sun is sweating itself out. The borders of the lake stretch to shake the toads
in their rushes.
A deer is wearing nothing but a sweatshirt.
She takes her antlers off & the lake is confused & a little horny.
ONLY FOR THE DEVIL CAN LUST LAST ETERNAL

Somehow I came to sit upon a perfectly square hill.
HA HA Ha ELEPHANT-BITE

The things that go missing long after they will be missed.
GULP GULP

Slow enough for a foundation to build itself around.

Fingerprints of cotton candy.

Half-weather coating the ferris-wheel.

Lights like heaven shouting stupid & drunk.

A pond in heaven filled with dead fish.
HALF-SCABBED MORNING

Windowless window box.
Pinecone sprayed silver won’t grow no sterling spruce.
Look a little less charming in the dark.
ONE EYELASH ON FIRE WON’T IGNITE THE BROW

Not one thing goes quite right.

Friedrich Kerksieck lives in Memphis & runs Small Fires Press.
To hit the moon, you have a nest in it. Instead of the walls, folks, instead of spending a month in a retirement swamp, tune into weeds, the hum of dirt cheap dirt. It’s all water about us, palliating. Apartment all feeling, all masonry and open air. What do I give if warnings crumble through the roof if I think it’s a few feet to jump across the sea. You remind me down into direction, squinting squares out into terra firma. Often, I go atlas and study the wide world in wonder. Go backwards from August to March. Without warning, without ceremony, you show me this little one off—you seem to understand me perfectly. And just as continual smoke might be right where a hearth in the woods is concerned, I keep a lighthouse going straight through many a wild Sabbath. It’s the fire of life, hot neighbors coming over in hot evenings, any shade at all.
Slovenly

Where I wear a mask not something extra and walk down streets
the woods for whatever it is you want I keep saying all I want is to keep on walking for instance you ask me what do you want to do walk
I say and you say fine with me and then go ahead and make me dinner it’s this fantasy I have a domestic life but not really real my life’s just swell I keep doing it every day and some days it feels like other days it feels like an adventure

Seth Landman's book, Sign You Were Mistaken, will be out from Factory Hollow Press this fall. Some recent poems can be found in Jellyfish, Skein, Ghost Town, and a few other places.
AUBRIE MARRIN

POSTCARD TO MILLBROOK, I

Dear

I’m sounding things out—

acan aken ache ahr kee OP tuhr ihks.

What’s going to happen to the slow lorises in the Millbrook zoo?

Osama Bin Laden is dead, or this is some kind of love song.

George Stubbs was obsessed with painting white mares in the moment of being attacked by lions.

I pledge allegiance to my dark botig botah body.
POSTCARD TO MILLBROOK, II

Dear

Animal bones pressed in city asphalt.

I’m talking about being human.

I’ll never be a real home owner.

Look at these hips.

You coughed and coughed your way out of here.

I can hear the loons out on your lake sounding out the sounds

lunaticus, lunatic

see the luna moth clinging to the screen.
POSTCARD TO MILBROOK, III

Dear

There’s no existence outside comparison.

I’m luminous
black and white

while outside goldenrod bursts from the roadside and waste places with jaundiced eyes, solidago canadensis.

O Canada,

the complicated body.

Lao Tzu says the water isn’t afraid of any dangerous place, but the Book of Change, I haven’t read it.

POSTCARD TO MILLBROOK, IV

Dear

Hurricane Mountain, Paradox Lake, Spectator—

these places are for real.

Snoqualmie is just an old Lushootseed word meaning ferocious people.

Sumac bobs god-smacked red magnolia blossoms opened past opening—

I love you crab grass,

I love you sprawling empty lots—

During his honeymoon, George Stubbs stayed in a two-room cottage, in one room hanging up the decaying carcass of a horse that he lovingly dissected.

Junebug, here I pin your eyes.

Aubrie Marrin’s poems have appeared or are forthcoming in Western Humanities Review, Guernica, Harp & Altar, Sink Review, NOÖ Journal, The Literary Review, Ilk, and Colorado Review. She received her MFA in poetry from Columbia University in 2005, and was also a finalist for the 2012 Lexi Rudnitsky First Book Prize from Persea Books. Born and raised in upstate New York, she currently lives and works in Brooklyn. from Fifteen Symbols

coarsened/ process

after saying these things, I woke where life was still artifact, made of possessions he no longer owned in the heat, my shins dripped water around us various tools of distillation

: like sheets stretched on poles to receive the dew his cassette tapes, plastic photo frames, all hauled to the back dumpster

it had to be done—clearing but local strategy at home, my things appeared as reliquaries or ropes with their ends cut off Coda

Nomadic, our figured shoreline roams Our elbow of sand and island’s intimate salt Alleyways colonial in their dingy whites, Doorways tin strips the budgies craft from daylight Each and another on the higher vocalizing then—

Lauded, our missing drifts How long have you lived, asks the world as we arrive In it, dually twinned rooms Salient with mosquito netting, sheets In a hallway’s silk profusion Through each of four walls walks the relapse of relic Just as I’m following you, animate pause Alembic

One cannot force a needle within the hasp stupored and risen in the abdomen’s house where no one abides but its resident stabling, the scent of animal drinking water from clear glass or a likeness having found its shore, lithe and uninhabited, where nothing could be less likely than the fetal heart, exaggerated swell, the plunge of ballast scraping across Somewhere a boat oars, and gulls where they should rest, wander—wings fanned over, their bright fatigue

Rachel Moritz is the author of the chapbooks Night-Sea and The Winchester Monologues, both from New Michigan Press. Her work has recently appeared or is forthcoming in Aufgabe, Cannibal, Iowa Review, Typo, and VOLT. She lives in Minneapolis, where she edits poetry for Konundrum Engine Literary Review and publishes an (occasional) chaplet series from WinteRed Press.
Might I recommend your depicting yourself as vivid, versus lying across the tracks and squeezing your eyes shut?

Mushrooms dot the corner lot, not one of them edible, and dandelions seem immune to any curfew.

Tickets once purchased in advance seem worth less than the thought of any venture, as if the story line were made.

Her Majesty's photograph appears brushed lovely, yet I do not know the date of her jubilee.

Being punished for being yourself leaves scars to be revealed in future tense, in full regalia unseen.
Perfunction trips up better accidents than God can claim.
"Are you on your way?" "I'm on the 101, and it's slogging."

Tempura blossoms channel infancy by ear.
Fragrance limited by sacrifice tracks focus.

Tonight will clarify the damages performed by big mo.
Close your eyes, and possibly whatever it is will hurt less.

We had a governor who made the polity appear sane.
Champions do not come cheap, I read, they are small jewels.

Flute lessons, flute lessons, and still intimidation by open combat plus the gold standard of vibrato.
One Hundred Seventy-Eighth

Draft prints in tasteless orange, my ink levels are low. My blood type is A-positive, my father's type was "0."

If at night the blossoms have a sound, it is the same sound as my sleep, your sleep, the integers.

When endurance has been tested, there will be no more examinations done from theory and from distances.

"My land," said our near neighbor, "what happened here last night?" The room, of course, went quiet, as rooms do.

Antiphon, just when the faithful least expect to have been recognized, acknowledged, given a role.
One Hundred Seventy-Ninth

I was just notified of my faux morning person status, shadowed by Prince Willcome hovering in the pantry.

My gift, a monthly calendar of squares good through eighteen months from now: perfect for copying templates.

Teach me taste: my faith in you seems barometric, a veritable load of homonyms and herbicides

We have so much ground to cover, after we plant so much ground cover, myrtle or near kin, a break from barrenness.

The human condition: perpetually in search of a notary public who does not charge a fee.

Sheila E. Murphy’s most recent book publications include American Ghazals (1-60) from Otoliths Press (2012) and Continuations 2 (with Douglas Barbour) (University of Alberta Press, 2012). Murphy is co-founder of the consulting firm Executive Advisement. She travels worldwide for business and presentations. This fall, she will perform from Continuations (2006) and Continuations 2 in Canada with Douglas Barbour. Murphy lives in Phoenix, Arizona.
Here’s my nature, fill me in locating correct words of a song saw November’s bird lines go relics backed in the garage how I plucked at a stain on cement amend the lopsided aesthete

“How many coats will this time take?”

listen if you can hear

Many came to see their reflection weaving metal tips in a window facing west to stare where greatness stood for beating down a presence confidence killed the sparrow lips couldn’t shape the words open ended as the wind backhanded method of a songbird

“But we came to hear a song” peeling oranges against the radiator Competing forces

today’s attempt to upheave

“What I found left cold sloughed off skin”

If you came to sing, sing

“once an itch these scratchings” bone rattle

when he entered I collapsed old patio furniture

“curbs left the swallows sleeping”

Is that how it went?

“brandishly bent the ugliest patio furnishes” gloat’s grasp

Today’s a cleaver if you conceal tomorrow’s mishap acoustics off mint tile

Once it’s a song words itch on the page melody crutch

so she packed in songs left cold

Once it’s a song you can’t play it down some romantic notion found among the tangible yellowing In breaks of the lattice bottom chords

image a comfortable slump in line with the view I'm bracing my mind wayworn cutouts pattering a leg inclined

hinged, loaded

filiforms thickening into plates

“Do we make it over?”

spelling primitive, forgetful ways written on a body of sentiment bowstring truss

“Will he pull you through?”

black-throated-blue through an onus of knots rigid frame

curtains drawn over the resolving city

Jennifer Pilch is the author of three chapbooks: Profil Perdu (Greying Ghost Press), Mother Color (Konundrum Engines Editions), and Prim Imprints (forthcoming, Dancing Girl Press). Her poems have appeared in American Letters and Commentary, Denver Quarterly, Fence, New American Writing and many other print and online journals.
Praise

An elegy transpired faster—

Clockwork, il-prepared we were
as a flavorless prey.

& weeks after that...

Our aims to sentence feeling.

Failing here,
my life is repository

(whose isn’t)

& fool.
Regrets like painting mounted a long hall.

A house ain’t ours, never was.

Is the plan the body or trawling—

Faces we can’t stand.

What with my hands today.

What to ruin by my arms, heart around such feeling.
Refusing the treetops for his crib.

I swear it’s worth dying over.

Is the plan the body or pending. Not a lot stays the same, but I...

Who can you blame.

I regret drinking less, a giraffe by its neck.

& meanwhile weather.

Michael Robins is the author of two poetry collections: The Next Settlement (University of North Texas Press, 2007) and Ladies & Gentlemen (Saturnalia Books, 2011). He teaches literature and creative writing at Columbia College Chicago.
Moments Out A Window

then null.

what kind of xeroxed space is this? bending around.

tilting in.

inches and toenails. a tangle of cords and roads spilled into roads.
dizzy. spotless.
tree, pavement, SUV. even the weather!
such steely blue! moths bumping bumping!

my eyes, cached. hanging loosely above.

i graft it. i graphed it. i was ready.

held together by a dearth of space.

medicine cabinet mirror swings light across shower curtain.
a narrative arc. eight a.m.

sun holds tight to the floorboards, parallel shafts of light divide my feet. the floorboards are a logic.

feet long for the solidity of parallel and perpendicular. eyes long for symmetry. fingers on the home keys.

nothing happened but a sunspot and a dead wasp. type it out.

internal order; magical thinking. fingerprints. “at the pervasive expense of efficiency”. tip, tap. this gorgeous dread: each movement, an egg slipped into boiling water.

often the wound makes a sound. “not imposed from without”. the lightbulb voice. burnt in rapture.

“repeating words silently”: barefoot dreams of september. a polyp in the throat. something less lonely than a bucket.

“clearly excessive”

i regret my fingers.

Jordan Soyka received his MFA from Louisiana State University, where he was the poetry editor for New Delta Review and an editorial intern at The Southern Review. His work has been published in GlitterPony, >kill author, La Petite Zine, Cave Wall, and The Quarterly Conversation and is forthcoming in Spork. He lives in New Orleans, and teaches at Southern University.
Good Morning!

Biting the inside of your knee.

One day I start writing and I'm writing and writing and writing and even when I stop writing I'm writing, even when I stop thinking I'm still writing, even when I stop I'm still.
I fight with my cat and she lets me win. When I wake up there’s a bouquet of mice at the foot of my bed.

September 19, 2010 — Mary’s father died this morning.
The kitchen smelling of candlewax.

A very old dream where an argument escalates until I get shot and I have to be violent in return. But I can steer the dream now, I make it rain so much we’re too wet to be angry. The waters rise and we start over once more. You always return, you teach me how to swim. Fuck you.
A large man, a landlord, knocking loudly on my door. Which I open, terrified. He hands me a photo of Mars.

The breeze on my nose as I try to kiss Mary through her c-pap machine.
A proofreading dream in which I’m correcting the Bible, and as I’m making changes I’m changing all of its readers, making them more gentle – I am given a new letter that softens each word I add it to.

A crow in my mouth, making plans.
It gets late. In ones and twos the grownups go to the room you’re not allowed to go, not even when you grow up. You fall asleep on the couch and wake up in your room. You don’t remember your dreams.

Numbers or. Droplets and the one dollar birdhouse. My neighbor’s chickens. My other neighbor’s dogs.
Lightflicker cameraface going to come back as a bird among birds.

Only wearing gray clothes. The pigeons ask me who I’m trying to impress.
I get so big different parts of me follow separate evolutionary paths.

Brothers follow, in my dreams I have so many brothers, even the women in my dreams are my brothers.
Old, asleep, unworking, sweaty, unworking, a salt chest, a salt forearm too.

In the dream I forget I was made out of water, and thought the ocean was lonely.
Impatient diggings, your thumb into the peeling part of you. Straw ticking waking up in my brother’s bed Mary says it’s my bed now.
We are given new fathers. We share pomegranates.

O living loquat tree your big green leaves rustling in the darkness.
Roll over and push blankets into the cold. My wife is a swan. Next to her I get to be a swan too.

Hugh Behm-Steinberg is the author of Shy Green Fields (No Tell Books) and The Opposite of Work (JackLeg Press, forthcoming). From January 1, 2010 to December 31, 2010, he kept a journal in which he wrote his first thought each morning. Good Morning! consists of 120 pieces from that journal related to dreaming and the position/acts of him and his wife Mary’s bodies in bed. A pillowbook, if you’d like. Other portions of Good Morning! have appeared in Leveller and Drunken Boat, and as chapbooks published by Dusie and Deconstructed Artichoke Press.
signature move

/
initials  cross  shuffle - lumber

/
seal  stamp  frustrate  circumvent  weigh down

/
hallmark  impression  pound  inoperative  feathers dent  fancy  pulse  out of order  plummy castle in the air  no longer in fashion

/
make public  taste  mould

/
brand  the world at large  hint  vein craft  traffic  handle  round  gossip  keep and eye on circulation  pet name  ammunition  rumour  discernment

/
passage  trained  rich  full of bologna  sensitivity

/
means of access  accomplished  mellifluous  warmth

/
instrument  honeyed  heat

/
organ  channel  sugar coated  law enforcement

/
tissue  plastered  put into practice

/
network  hankie  shit faced  coat  drill  ritual

/
web  after deductions  come to terms with  puncture

/
net  assumptions  vocabulary  break

/
make a profit of  composure  bite the dust

/
poise  sink your teeth into  sand

/
suspend  go under the surface  scrape

/
on the back burner  come out in the open  flake  tussle disco  shillelagh  vanity case dance  hollowness swing jitter bug oscillate twitch contraction through the ceiling

abridgment split up with digest make yourself scarce

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug

volume break down rustle up

jitter bug
Robert Swereda is a member of the Filling Station collective in Calgary. He studied creative writing at Capilano University in Vancouver. Recent work has been published in In Air/Air Out, Steel Bananas, CV2, The Enpipe Line Anthology and Poetry Is Dead.
Farrier, Swamp Gardener

A boy with a 2x4 nailed to his forehead gallivants down an alley, rallying cats and rats with lent blood drips.

A strapping gal in feathery flapper dress, flaps her arms. “Where are you headed, child? Your head!”

“I heard a carpenter nailed carpet to foot. Nobody’s done this, no way. We are all artists.” Blowing blood-splat bubbles, the woozy boy awes at his lobbed globs (images on swallowed cameras, airborne) before illuminating his lumber hat dignity (ingenuity). “1 degree angle, hammer socking scalp blind.” The boy faints in a pack of monk parakeets chowing jumping beans.

24 lime conures bounce on 2x4. Dapper flapper trundles bundled boy to plump dumpster – a heaping swamp hatchery: thatched ferns, furry sapling spurs, bugs budding rampant, gar fish, a green heron, leaf wreaths – verbose verdure smothering a blacksmith (smocked in cammo hemp chestwaders) welding sprout-seed torn seams with moss farragoes & floss-slim alloys, varying fused patterns with cubist verdigris.

Laddered up lily pads and fungal rungs, the smithy sees her and him, “Ah ha.” He hefts aside reed chaff. “This alley sure is a valiant gallery. Let’s lay him on this palmetto platform. Hey, hip stilettos.” She clicks her aqua water-colored heels; parakeets flush into swamp pomp.

The farrier scoops a seahorse out of a rain spoon pooled in a heart-wrought leaf, de-shoes its silver tail hook, peeks in boy’s mouth, apologizes to Big-belly. “I’ll coat you with gold, see those molars?” He daubs dulled nail, tamps bleeding.

“You’re not going to remove it!” Flabbergasted flapper guesses, gasses.

“N discourage his imagination?... My thanks. You brought him to the right place.” The farrier ferries for silver-slippered ferrets burrowed in clay cliff turrets. “We’ll be here when he comes to. Fresh is the best time to babble about collaboration.”
Mortar Orchard’s Oracle

Alley cove alcove altar, brick factory parapet, resolute flue arched w/ bricks n pickers’ bones, shrine enshrined w/ bonsai pear trees, seedy smoothies in pint-sized pint glasses spiked w/ sporks n pinklady snorkels, parasols patched w/ banana peel parachutes, chipped brick chessmen, origami berry bridges rigged w/ AAA battery battering-ram robots, lactating stalactites udder’d w/ fruit bats.

A teen w/ glazed paws clung to a box of bear claw doughnuts, a helmet w/ 2 pop cans IV’d to licked lips, pauses at the passage, chisels the password “brick-chilly w/o poetry” enters, asks the Mortar Orchard’s Oracle, “Is it true, what they say about produce still being produced here? Hope so, museums are lame.”

The oracle, shackled to altar by tree root boots, torques his sweet-tooth tourniquet (a bannaquit flushes out a barren cornucopia; a rabid rabbit-bandit trips on a melon-taffy trip-wire, spills a purse of sour kiwis, gnaws pursed lips). “Perhaps.”

Keen teen towels off a trowel, notes purple pie-like residue, lugs bucket under udder leak, stirs brick/milk mix, mortars his left leg knee-high to lower lee grotto ledge. “I’ll stay and poem til you tell.”

“I will if dole up a doughnut. Got coconut?”

The teen reaches beseechingly for gooey ringed cakes, just out of reach.
Sweetest Sourdough

A lux-tuxedo’d nomad with a showercap draped off cobwebbed whiskers, whisks lime ices, ice-skates frozen fringe of cud-mud clayed causeway.

Munching a puffy pumpkin muffin, he spittles crumbs for thirsty crows pecking ice n sipping slippery stream slits. From his truck of a rucksack, clamping him slunk n hunchbacked, he rustles up a paunchy pouch, un-cinches seaweed tassles; chews open seed packets n spit-sows. Plum saplings, sugar bushes & succulent shrubs apt to rub up on, burst mature in his wake.

A boy bedded on a lush-soil stoop, shamrock-shaped soap rock pillowed, dreaming of lily pad prairies n moss-headed giants chugging lakes (slaked), wakes n shakes at sight of the sweetest sourdough, a fledging legend hatched from his pal who pens dreams.

Boy replicates supplication from 1 of said pal’s ready-made reveries, “Whence u waltzed our prize promenade – oft ballyhooed & made ballads of – on bladed stilts, hence fragrant fences stemming lilac-trances.”

The sweetest sourdough, a beat before he’d do in dream, uncaps his root-maze of mustaches n spills a bag to brag about – gushing daybreak daylight, then yogurt chocolate goat milk marbles n broken-in ball mitts, oiled, aged, grooved w/ hoof-signatures of icon cows & hero kangaroos.
Bathed Math

Fountains of Sleuths

Folks are folksy in/on this channel, even a tad hokey, but truth and charity are truisms. Truancy of all evils was the 1st commandment commandeered from top utopias. Still there’s grime, septic enzymes, slimed gutters, rare breezes shipping rare diseases… Bathing now n then’s not a bad idea.

Every other block’s got a pool. 2 are in bodega basements (the one that slings ring dings, ring pops n candy cigarettes). There’s always a sleuth or 2 dipping toes, ripping clueless clues to feed otters n loons (surviving nature boon barometers of earth’s worth).
These play-P.I.’s are really playwrights, scribes of crime comedies.
While we snorkel they’ll describe plots re-potted to poke puns at pundits.
Let them.
Arcane Arcade

Ceiling raining rings n dings, winged electric-tints fling n zing.
Pumice balustrade fragments, flecks bamboo n phragmites fenced fen.
Inverted ferns churn ducts under muskeg.
This rutted shortcut cuts the bushwhacking, smacks of new tang’d turf perfumes, pushes trickling pioneering trekkers out on an archaic stone n bone ramped mosaic.
As they mosey double bulbs bulge. Poem lightbulbs glow, poppies pop.

Sean Ulman, worder birder baller server, is writing a long novel about Seward, Alaska & Art. He's had recent work at the delinquent, vol 1. brooklyn, bolts of silk and clutching at straws. A slice from his chapbook, Radland (Deadly Chaps ’11) was nominated for a pushcart. sean-ulman.tumblr.com Vinny Walsh was born in 1977 in Cross Village, Michigan. He likes to take photographs. http://vinnywalsh.com/Palaver

Though I mopped, the grit lies underfoot. The live-forever pot got kicked over by some community college boys. It kept growing, like a cigarette. The spider shrinks blacker on the white oven as it dries. The rat in the wall discovered my food was all in tubs with gaskets. This desk machine emits a scratchy palaver, not those claws, and the scent in the premature grass makes my dog howl only in his sleep. Poor him, how he trembles, mistaking me for what he wants, and how I throw him to one side of my life, a blue couch. The taxes that I pay up this morning are Zeno’s rush into the night. Under the building my mother burned down with chicken fat balls I shimmy along the dirt and the webs. I look back at the square of brilliant sunlight and the face of the caretaker, who yellows my last warning before he closes and latches the crawlspace door.
Mustard Soup

Périgourdine truffles pox a Lyon chicken, the blue tagged feet gripping up at the air. I can’t wrap a sheep’s head in cheesecloth despite its imploring eyes and I don’t eat much offal behind the softly clicked door, from my tray. My address?: Baudelaire, my liver has been bored, once removed. C’est ca, Tuscaloosa. No one truly likes the gamey crisp of cornichons better than a kosher dill nor the webby fat cauling rabbit breasts and thighs chopped à la campagne, shaped in a paste, more than Normandy butter on pumpernickel triangles. And that clear cooled bone gel. No one really likes loving that. But living is recipes. We agree to eat something above the grass. I spent four seconds drinking sirloin roast juice from a plate in the dead man’s house with my face. Then I turned red and lowered my cheek to the table and would not say a word. But what has happened to that girl in her strawberry dress, her books tangled like hay in her hair?
Legume

Glocks, not birds, are dreams. This portrait before me in black and white doesn’t impersonate who or when, or when it was there before. But eight is not infinite, nor is night, nor knight, nor Echo, nor Rhino, nor the sigh in the sycthe in Scylla’s citrine eye. I had a gun I wore like bread. It ticked red and dry in the corner, surrounded by brown sacking. I snipped my loaves with scissors into leaves. The wheat of old Libya lay stored in clay hives, in the desert where our bones come from even yet. I am no more a root than I was a bean.
Small

Water leaks into a blue bucket. I took the tests by storm. I transplanted the elephant ears, watched joy divide. I stepped on the duckling, legs so frail in the grass. My passport, smaller than I thought it would be, joined the secret agents. My home there in the unlisted place: a boat on bricks in the water. My temptation: to start the scalding music, but then I have to hold my chewed ear. The crocuses remain vivid. I will want to play that electric piano in Amsterdam. I tap my pencil on the projector’s glass. Soft skin seems just under my fingertips. It’s cold and I can’t eat. When I was young and intelligent, and stayed up late on Friday night, I watched Uncle Joe and Johnny Carson and then something and then the national anthem would play and the signal would turn into snow. Then I could sleep. I have traveled to say, I was here before.

KARENA YOUTZ & SCOTT ABELS

from Owyhee

Karena, the alphabet is not a turtle.
It's as segregated a nation as I've seen.

Today I am a legal citizen of the internet, which is to say a gypsy with a job, when Politics

follow Poems,

moving in a grid across the small city,

covering everything on the island, sitting in the sun, when you allow everything, at last, the chants say nothing, and, finally, I am writing to you from an island in the shape of a box of geraniums.

I see my mistake was already made by the website.

Scott, after painting a turtle with harmless pigments I had to dissolve and mix the internet stopped using the alphabet. A gypsy would never forgo it. I pledge, no more:

never again will I make promises. I will see sorrow, jobs, and agendas.

Speaking flowered directing us to a second home painted on its native citizen.

How can I follow grids? The desert has been printed on my protective coating.

Sun covers my back, allowing island geraniums to float out rootless and red.

Could we predict antecedents by writing backwards? Both of us silent at the chants wish to get cinder-shaped on all the voices.

Karena, on And Island
we don't have land turtles.

This is why we can't have nice tans.

In Mexico, a "pig" meant real slow internet. It meant forget it.

Even the gypsy doesn't use the alphabet differently in a city.

We can pick the flower, but we can't predict the seed.

That's backwards. Karena, sing tender into the cinder, the sorrow of a holding the hard flower up to your ear

explain to me
the meaning of Owyhee.
Slow, rare flowers of And Island start molten-lava orange then turn tan.

Scott, does one pluck from the internet a pig and turtle explain sensible grazing?

Gypsies regard resources using every sinew of the alphabet. I never heard of seeds. A hard ear predicts meaning backwards, as in, forget it.

But I sing first.

How nice the sorrow tends Owyhee, Scott, it’s like Mexico but with no cops to pay

Cinderland among a rocky spine fake native for "a while ago the ocean went somewhere else" or "what holds the ocean now?"

Scott Abels lives and teaches in Honolulu, Hawai‘i, where he edits the online journal of poetry Country Music. He is the author of a full-length poetry collection, Rambo Goes to Idaho (BlazeVOX, 2011), and a chapbook, Nebraska Fantastic (Beard of Bees, 2012).

Karena Youtz is a poet living in Boise, Idaho. She is the author of the full-length poetry collection, The Transfer Tree (1913 Press, forthcoming).